

DID YOU KNOW?

- Welsh wines are world-beaters – Ancre Hill Estates’ 2008 vintage was voted best sparkling wine in the world at the Bollicine del Mondo International Competition in Italy in 2012. Ancre Hill Estates is also one of only two biodynamic vineyards in the UK.
- The Romans and French monks are said to have introduced wine to Britain, but Lord Bute, a wealthy and enthusiastic Scottish industrialist, is credited with planting Wales’ first commercial vineyard at Castell Coch, north of Cardiff in 1875.

The very best of Welsh vineyards

The award-winning vineyards of Wales have grouped together to create a Welsh Vineyards Association to promote the growing wine sector in Wales.

Wales is fast developing a reputation for wines of excellent quality. The hard work of dedicated viticulturists from Anglesey to Pembrokeshire and across to Monmouthshire is being rewarded with prestigious national and international awards, which have created headlines and put Wales on the world wine map.

Welsh vineyards produce around 100,000 bottles of wine each year and many welcome visitors for tours with tasting sessions as part of Wine Trail Wales. It’s a great way for viticulturists to share their passion and for visitors to learn about the complete winemaking process. Visit a vineyard and taste the quality.

If the last time you tasted Welsh wine was a decade or so ago, you now owe it to yourself to try some world beating wines from Wales.

Passionate Producers

- Welsh vineyards are a good place to get close to rare and unusual wildlife – walk with llamas through Glyndwr Vineyard in the Vale of Glamorgan or feed a pair of red kites at Jabajak Vineyard in Carmarthenshire.
- Wines from Glyndwr Vineyard have graced European State banquets and are served in the House of Lords’ restaurant. Tintern Parva was served at the European Summit when Britain held the Presidency.
- More than 20 grape varieties are grown in vineyards across Wales.
